Comments: The Midnight "Restoration" Project is way to large. It is primarily a logging project masquerading as a restoration and fire safety project. There will be tens of thousands of log truck trips and significant changes to undisturbed landscapes. There should have been more options considered. The project should be scaled back. The logging and reduction of fuels should be concentrated in the wildland-urban interface roughly a kilometer from homes and communities. The project should preserve medium and large trees to maintain biodiversity and ecosystem function.
