Comments: I absolutely oppose this unvetted desecration of Colorado timberlands. The environmental impact has not been adequately studied. As a member of the BLM Rocky Mountain Region's Resource Advisory Council, I have provided citizen input on a volunteer basis, to the management of public lands in southern Colorado. The management of these lands is complex and requires much research and study before landscape altering changes are made. Proposed changes, such as this, need adequate public input and proper scientific vetting. The potential for erosion, flooding, and altering of sensitive and critical water resources and water quality, is a huge risk to the communities of the Front Range. Homeowners in high risk fire areas have a personal responsibility to manage their own defensible space and not leave it to the federal government to butcher the landscape and auction off forest resources. This is an environmental disaster in the making. Stop the steal and sale of Colorado's precious resources!
