Comments: The proposed management plan is a good start and honest effort. Nature doesn't care about that and must be protected from humans. The canyon is sacred. Public use is not. The roads on either side are scars. We humans create scars often for our needs and try to minimize their harm. Climbing routes are scars made for an elite who want thrills and to just conquer nature for their egos. These users put their egos above the harm they do and demand submission to their needs. Outfitters and equipment stores exploit the canyon and return nothing. We can and must protect this resource from their egos and demands and exploitations. The plan would be a means of doing this and protecting the canyon from inflated egos and rubber shoes. I grew up in that canyon and have used climbing routes in others and know it is time to protect these places. For those who think this is unnecessary, there is a rattler waiting for you on the next hold you should not use but do anyway.
