Comments: I am a professional environmental educator with deep knowledge of forest ecology and timber sales opposition. The roadless rule was fully considered by the public and OUR decision was made. This new proposed change jeopardizes the stability of slopes and retention of water from increasingly catastrophic rain events. We are just now suffering massive flooding because the landscape does not retain and release water slowly any more. Under absolutely no plausible scenario will massive increases in road building result in anything but horrible downstream effects. Don't be fools. Anyone with half a brain can see the potential problems with more aggressive resource extraction. The public has already spoken on this, and now you are trying to push past changes to the public will in very short comment periods. Shame. Be honest public officials and stop ignoring science and the public.
