

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 3/11/2026 9:33:36 PM

First name: Amy

Last name: Stafford

Organization:

Title:

Comments: The many environmental groups that object to logging because they are concerned about the wildlife is laughable. The amount or number of animals that have been burned to death or suffered horrific burn injuries due to the wildfires in Oregon is astronomical. These environmental groups trying to make this a political game is disgusting. They don't live here and have to breathe the smoke and watch the animals suffer. These are the same groups that want solar power. Only a few miles away from the Ochoco National Forest is a huge solar farm right in the middle of elk, antelope and deer migration. I don't see them protesting that because they are worried about the wildlife. It's such a double standard. I don't know how anybody could take anything that they say serious. Our forests need to be logged and cleaned up to thrive and for the wildlife to have a healthy habitat.