Comments: The United States has had a long tradition of conservation of our woodlands and outdoor spaces. I simply can't believe that over the course of a decade that we have so completely and irrevocably reversed course on something so fundamentally American. This time of foolishness will eventually come to an end. Equilibrium will return to our nation. My question to you is this. Do you wish to be remembered as the people who safeguarded our nation's woodlands when it would have been easier to go along with what is politically convenient, or will you stand for what you know in your heart is right, and refuse to let unchecked capitalism destroy our nation's treasures for future generations?
