Comments: I think this is a good idea but if their doing it like lambs canyon Id say no. On the lower reaches they did a great job leaving a few tall and healthy trees but a mile up a year later even the healthy trees they left were too burnt to stay standing. They have a mass amount of trees left cut down in the waterways. I dont think that was intentional, just lazy. It doesnt look healthy at all a mile up the canyon. It looks like a bad burn. Things happen so I recommend the use of mules and increasing staff on the upper portions of a burn to fet a better result. Also is there a way to increase native plant growth not invasives after a burn. Please leave more aspen. Their roots connect. The aspen especially got over toasted. We dont need mudslides from over burning. Lets do better.
