Hi I am a very angry resident of Oregon and rightfully so! So many ecosystems are being destroyed across our entire planet for human greed and so much progress destroying forests and trees all for a billionaires false sense of reality to maintain levels of capitalism in order to divide, not just in nature taken away from humanity from the Northern Americas but specific to Oregon and an experienced hiker and camper of the Mt Hood area which I frequent all the time. There's already issues with the way we have everything set up right now and the way we treat the Mt. Hood area like a resort when we are the ones that should be allowing nature to take hold and do what is intended and the repercussions lying there after. People already tear up the land b This proposed project concerns me as I do not want to see the area I love be destroyed by a facade of in researched projects that are incomplete and therefore nulled by the scientific community. There is a claim that it is an emergency area needing to be addressed, but if that is the case it must be an IMMEDIATE risk to human health and I just don't see from any of the specialist reports given that this is the case. In fact the botanist's reports claim that not enough time was even given for an assessment! If this truly is an emergency are the proposed actions really even going to achieve relief from these claims? Commercial thinning does not fit under these categories of emergency? I just don't see a clear necessity to cut these forests and destroy the only thing g that that in itself helps combat not just mammal displacement but even the bugs that are habitual to the environment and ecosystem. There are many political issues in this climate that concern me mainly of the allowance of some of these companies to break policies before the area has truly been deemed uninhabitable and the falsity of destroying old growth for profit when just 30% of the worlds wood resources are depleted only for greed. It feels like a cash grab, I am highly opposed. Especially at a time when we NEED our forests for our climate and wellbeing. Thank you for your time and please contact me immediately for any follow up!
