Comments: As a resident of the state of Utah living in the Salt Lake City area, I am against this project by the Forest Service.

As a state, we are already in an area where we have stand up against a new project every week to protect the natural areas of this state. The Salt Lake Valley already has one of the worst air qualities in the world on specific days, we do not need even more. And for you to want to do this in a watershed area is quite insane. You know you aren't trying to restore the watershed, but you will be causing more pollution. The valley will receive the worst kind of air pollution and we have to expect it to pour down Big Cottonwood Canyon night after night every fall and spring for the next ten years if your plan goes through. Toxic herbicides will be sprayed in that watershed to reduce vegetation, the exact opposite of protecting your water quality.

For once, stand for the people of the state of Utah. We can't keep ruining what makes our state so great.
