Comments: As the mine expands and hires more people, it greatly affects our local roads, school buses, and Park City school facilities. Because the mine doesn't provide enough housing, many of these workers are forced to move to Park City. This means we-the local homeowners-are stuck picking up the tab for the extra wear and tear, while the mine doesn't pay a dime to help us out. As a realtor, I see the reality every day: property taxes are so high here that people are being taxed on home valuations that are actually more than what they could sell their houses for.

Giving this mine a 42-year permit extension based on completely outdated data-while totally ignoring the massive tax burden being shoved onto Park City families-is just flat-out wrong and unfair. The state needs to step up, protect local homeowners, and make the mine pay its fair share.
