Comments: The Black Hills National Forest matters to me. I grew up going there every year and still have family in the area. What matters most: the impact to the environment and possibly people and animals in the area. If this goes through, when you lose nature it's gone forever. Once you're done with the site, even if you don't horribly destroy much more, you have forever destroyed that site and it will never be the same. We have destroyed so much nature already, we need to protect what little we have left. At the very least they should be doing studies to see what impact it may have before moving forward at all. 30 days is a joke, why the push if you're not trying to do something shady?.
