Comments: I have been cross country skiing in this region since 1983. I always found the peace and quiet and beauty so soothing. Over the years snowmobiling has taken off and little by little they encroach on trails where skiers are heading towards yurts to get away from the noise of the city. These vehicles destroy the trails we love, spew gas fumes and are ridiculously loud. They cannot possibly hear us as they whip around curves and scare us into the woods. The map seems to show an abundance of choices for them to roam. Can it not be considered that certain trails be reserved for those of us who prefer the quiet, clean environment. Please, please be considerate of all those who want to enjoy this vast special place. Future generations will be served by having the foresight to consider the damage motorized vehicles can do to this environment.
