Comments: Sometimes in the span of our works we get carried away with our job title and forget our purpose and forget our mission. The prairie jackal showed up in the forest glen one day, asking for water, so the owl gave jackal some. the next day jackal brought his brother asking for water for the both of them, so owl garnered help from blue bird and together they brought the two prairie jackals water. The next day prairie jackal with his whole pack swam across the great bog pond came to Owl and Bluebird and asked for some water. The owl looked at the bluebird pensively. The jackals grew impatient and forming a great circle of movement trampled over the owl and the bluebird, the second jackal in the lead howling, "the water came from over there" and leading the pack, leaving a flattened scenery in their wake.The next day owl and bluebird woke, sore gathering their broken feathers and combing their ruffled crests. They approached the spring which had fed their family for generations to find a dry concrete mud pit, vanquished among the place salty chip packages strewn. Are you a bluebird about to get trampled? Mistaking yourself as an authority figure without even knowing the true charge of the old wise Owl you sit next to at the council? You keep handing jackals water and hosting a forum the next year where exponentially more appear, asking nay, taking what it is you've taken charge to administer. You've received one application to support this project but over 2,000 to the contrary, pleading for the protection no one believes the forest service was ever able to provide in the first place. I had to reflect and further, to cease as an employee for the Washington state department of ecology, Washington state department of natural resources, Washington state department of fish and wildlife, pierce county conservation district, Thurston county conservation districts. Fancy jobs where like minded people muse about the most important priorities, bide their time and mind to their tasks while the central message central mission of the Owl of the forest never can really persevere among the red tape. Have you been paid off for compliance? was a useful question, when I pivoted my career 10 years ago towards traditional skills homeschooling. What legacy will your role leave? Cook Lake in the bear lodge district has served as my family's only viable point of recreation in the past five years where strange prehistoric birds sit in the low canopy and belt harrowing calls through the night. the game plan:1. Don't skip the EIS draft2. Realize no action is equal3. Incorporate the Upton facility in the assessment, no one exists in a vacuum4. We've seen rare earth in the hills before. The state of south Dakota's water quality database still lists the effects of 1970's pursuits of uranium in the silts of the Cheyenne river where my mother in law rests, my children pick the choke cherries and plums. And one day we hope we could eat the fish we would catch. Stop making Original American lands a national sacrifice zone. Thank you for your time.
