Comments: I am writing because my family and I hunt, fish, and recreate on the Blue Mountains forests, and we also gather firewood and mushrooms there. These are public lands, and there is no logical reason to restrict access to them. The final forest plan must protect and maintain all existing motorized access and restore access where it has already been reduced. Wildlife and habitat management must not be used as a reason to take away motorized access. The Forest Service must also fully disclose and analyze how these decisions affect roads, routes, families, and communities. I want the Forest Service to restore all access and bring back year-round firewood cutting. The current restrictions on firewood cutting are unnecessary and do not make sense. I am personally frustrated with all the restraints being placed on people who just want to enjoy public lands. I grew up hunting and fishing in Eastern Oregon, and I see the Forest Service trying to lock up more and more of it and restrict access. If this continues, honest people will be forced to break the rules just to keep doing what they have always done. We also need to bring back logging instead of letting the forest be managed for fires.
