Comments: Some of the best moments of my life have been spent on US Forest lands in New Mexico. There, I watched White House Christmas tree being felled and loaded onto a truck headed to Washington DC one year. It's there that my family and I purchase our own Christmas trees each year. It is where we hike and find peace on warm summer days.

For me, America's true wealth is in our wilderness and untouched landscapes. To open it up to roads and further development would be irreversible, shortsighted and an insult to protective measures of the past.

I ask that you not reduce protections in federal forest and to please leave our federal lands undisturbed.
