

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 10/19/2014 12:00:00 AM

First name: Twila

Last name: Webb

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Forest Plan comment

To whom it may concern:

Special Management Areas within the U.S. Forests boundaries would create an important tool that would allow each district to micro-manage each area as it applies to that particular Forests care, management and access. Select logging, brushing, minimizing ground fuels, recreational activities, monitoring wildlife habitat, are a few of the reasons district foresters need such a tool.

Each district of the National Forests that we love so much all have unique dynamics that need to be managed individually not with a blanket approach. One outline just doesn't fit the many issues that apply. Our public lands need to be managed to thrive. There needs to be a balance not a lock.

Being able to be a part of the breath-taking country that we live in is a privilege. It is a privilege that we want to be able to share with our grandchildren. That won't be possible without multiple use on the Forest plans.

This generation has a responsibility to find a balance.

Extremists from both sides need to step away from the table. Both angles can be possible if we find a balance.

Don't destroy with over use

Don't destroy by locking it up

Balance - There are so many ways to manage

Thank you for listening,

Twila Webb