Comments: re: helicopter for big horn research

I strongly oppose the use of a helicopter for this work. It has been done for years by horseback and non invasive hiking. It must continue to be as non-invasive as possible for the animals as well as for humans who need quiet, natural environments for their health and sanity. Historically, Game and Fish has been more interested in maintenance for hunting purposes and had little use for "eco-types". I'm glad to see they are expanding their understanding and compassion for all views in whatever way they can.

I personally respect and acknowledge the years of doing this work in the Santa Catalinas by John Stair. His years teaching people about the environment were so valuable, especially teaching teachers. I applaud him and the years he gave to Game and Fish, Arizona and to us.

Respectfully,
Junardi
