Comments: Hi, is the only way to comment/object at this point to attend an in-person meeting? I live in Salt Lake but care a lot about the area - my grandfather was Frank W. Seaman, who was instrumental in Cedar Breaks attaining National Monument status. He and his 10 children lived at Duck Creek and other nearby ranger stations in the summers, and his 26 grandkids and numberless great-grandkids visit when we can. In my opinion, the area is already way overdeveloped. In particular I've noticed a marked increase in dandelions and a decrease in columbine, paintbrush, and other natives that have been choked out in recent years. Pretty sure the dandelions are the result of the unbridled construction in this once-pristine area. I know times are tough for the environment these days, but I hope what's left of the Forest Service will fight the proposed project for obvious reasons. Must we cede the ALL the beauty of the natural world to private developers out to make a buck??? Thank you for your service, Janine Sheldon
